"The Tow Path Club." "Crawford," writing to the Chicago Times rom Washington anent the "Tow Path Club" organization and its troubles, says: "Several months ago there budded and bloomed in this city an organization that called itself national. It attempted to shoot forth branches but the incipient idicay of the parant was such that propagation was a weak and lamentable failure. This association was known as the Tow Bath Club, so named in honor of the caual boy, Garfield, who was then a candidate for the Presidency. This Tow Path Club, as a local wit said, organized by electing its mem-bers to all the positions in a canal boat service, except the mules. There was a first deckhand, second deckhand, first roustabout, second roustabout, and other imaginative canal hande.

The Tow Path Club was made up of department clerks, who devised the tow path idiccy as a means of prolonging their efficial existence. "For three months thes: clerks have been absent from their work the greater portion of their time, doing what they call towpath work; that is, drinking cheap rum and howling servile speeches in little seven-by-time partis:n gatherings, where not a mother's son of the spectacrings, where not a mother's son of the spectators had a vote to be influenced. The Tow-pathers had a badge made, the design of which is a canal book, with helm hardsport, under a studding canvass of males fall sat, bearing down upon the White House. The canal book in the design is large enough to take the White Heure and all the departments into its hold. The care of the departments into its hold. The cars of the mules are a close copy of the first deckhands, the worthy genius who first was visited with the inspiration of devising the organizabeen white cap with a straight visor, worn with been white cap with a straight visor, worn with a white oil cloth cape. The edge of the cape was painted a beautiful red. Under the cape and cap the apparel of the average department servings permitted, though a second hand army uniform was considered more destrable. A small torch costing twenty five cents retail completed the picturesque make up of the Towpathers. Their appearance was grotesque enough to make the real mules of the towpath large themselves into hysterias.

estimated, produced about one-third of the hoarse shout of walcome that greeted him in front of the Riggs House. This ene act was the only official one approaching impercaces performed by the Townathers. It was noticed at the time that General Garfield did not fall upon the bosom of any of the dickhands, and that he embraced none of the roustabouts. He made to icquiries way the mules were overlooked in this organization. He merely treated the Towpathers as well as he did snybody elso, and that was all there was of it. When General Garfield sent word bere that he was coming on for a visit, the Towpathers proposed at one; to take him in head. The idiots even elected Garfield a chief deckhand, and then made ready for the old sailor of the raging canawl. They planned a reception in which a canal boat was to figure prominently.

"Then came Chief Deckhand Garfield's peremptory declination of any public reception. 1: came so curt and direc; that if there had been any mules in the organization their sensitive teelings would have been affronted. Bu: yesterday the Towpathers were enlightened. It is safe to say the mission of this society is at an end. After the vigorous setting down at General Garfield's hands that they received, even a mule's perosption is not needed to see that the canal organization should be damped up now and forever. Bome of the leading l'owpathers called upon General Garffeld in the name of the society. These blooming fresh water idiots had cards specially printed for the occasion, with the tide in ful of "first deck hard," etc., printed after each precious owner's name. One may imagine General Garfield's feelings when he was called from his library by a servant with a doz n of these cards. The reception he gave his friends was absolutely glacial. He curtly nodded to them, standing, and not asking them to sit down.

"One of the spukesmen feebly tried to say that he was glad to see that the Garfield canal boat was finally entering the last look, when General Garfield shut him off with euo a stera look that the speaker choked in the middle of a word, and almost strangled. Gradually it began to dawn upon the others chat they were not pleasant companiors, and they cropt silently away, hoping, as they went, that the? had not intraded. A first deckhard summed up the recention by answering and erquiry, "How reception by answering and erquiry, "How were you received?" "D-n cold." General Garneld said afterward to a trient that he had no patience with such idiocy. He was not ashamed of his having been a caual boy; neither was it a matter of boastine; it was a more ir cident in his life, of the least importance in shaping his after ourser."
